Industry News

Buying and Selling Used Data Cartridges - Worth the Risk?

Recycled or reused data cartridges are available in the data storage market as "re-certified" tapes. Re-certification is not a standardized process and there is no single comprehensive test available that can verify the tapes past environmental, physical or technical exposure.

Buying used tape provides no manufacturer's warranty and exposes your data centre to potential contamination.

Re-certification does not guarantee that your data has been completely erased. By selling your used data cartridges, you face the following risks:

- Exposure of confidential financial records and personnel information as well as valuable corporate IP information.
- Violation of IT internal controls leading to deficiencies under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

Buying and selling used tape may seem like a good financial decision, but can you afford to ignore the risks?

QRX Technology group only provides new tapes and we recommend secure tape destruction to make sure your confidential and sensitive data doesn't fall into the wrong hands.
